

Healing Power of Story

Saturday-Sunday, November 3-4, 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.

When we suffer —as individuals and in communities—stories can illuminate that experience. In these times, telling our stories offers a path toward healing.

In this workshop, we will write together to shape our experience of pain and healing, while sharing and offering responses to one another. We will read from and explore the uses of journals, essays, and poetry in the telling and receiving of stories.

This workshop is for teachers, counselors, parents, caregivers and students alike. Educators will leave with fresh material and exercises for the classroom.

Cost and Credit Options: $250, includes 15 CEUs or PDUs. Lewis & Clark Alumni save 20%. Can be taken for two semester hours of Graduate Continuing Education Credit or Degree Applicable Credit

About the Instructor | Joanne Mulcahy, PhD

Joanne B. Mulcahy has taught creative nonfiction at the NW Writing Institute for thirty years. She also teaches in prisons, libraries, health centers and other community settings in the U.S. and overseas. Her essays appear in numerous journals and anthologies including The Stories that Shape Us: Contemporary Women Write About the West, These United States, and The Writer's Chronicle. She is the author of Birth and Rebirth on an Alaskan Island, Remedios: The Healing Life of Eva Castellanoz, and Writing Abroad: A Guide for Travelers (with Peter Chilson).

